Acme's new smoked salmon plant picks up safety award

Company wins recognition as North Carolina Safety Site by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

Acme Smoked Fish's Wilmington smoked fish plant has been recognized as a North Carolina Safety Site by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

The Carolina Star Program, which is equivalent to the federal Voluntary Protection Program (VPP) Star certification, is designed to recognize employers and employees who have implemented effective safety and health management systems.

A rigorous two-year application process included several audits of Acme's facility, interviews with dozens of Acme employees, and participation in a safety conference, among other activities.
What's next for Whole Foods' Pigeon Cove plant?

Pharmaq Fishteq appoints new GM

Big Oil discovers aquaculture, pumps $30 million into feed venture

IntraFish parent extends reach in seafood news with full acquisition of Norwegian subsidiary

PE-backed Turkish bass and bream producer cautious with growth plans